We ask double degree students to submit applications for both Type A (through the local Chinese Embassy) and Type B (through Fudan University) scholarships. This dual application strategy maximizes opportunities for financial support. However, it's important to note that scholarship placement is not guaranteed.

The selection process is highly competitive. All applicants will undergo a rigorous evaluation based on their performance in the online interview. Scholarships will be awarded exclusively to top-ranking candidates who demonstrate exceptional merit and potential.

Regarding the online interview, it lasts approximately 15 minutes per candidate. During this time, each student is required to provide a concise self-introduction, followed by a Q&A session with a panel of three professors. The questions posed will be closely related to the candidate's academic transcripts, motivation letter, and other submitted documents. This interview is designed to assess the student's academic background, research interests, and overall suitability for the program.

Students who receive the Chinese government scholarship will not be eligible for the Department's expense reimbursement, as stipulated in the call for applications. However, they will still be eligible for the University's Double Degree scholarship.
